GOO ON BOOSTS FOR HAWAII AND ISLAND PAPAIA

Goo On, a young Chinese from Hawaii, who gained a position in the general land office, Department of the Interior, by the civil service competitive route, is showing that he has an open eye for anything that will benefit Hawaii at the national capital. Secretary H. P. Wood of the Promotion Committee has received the following letter and enclosure from Mr. On:

Washington, July 16, 1912.
Mr. H. P. Wood, Secretary Hawaii Promotion Committee, Honolulu, Hawaii:

Dear Sir: I am enclosing herewith a copy (photographic) of an account published in the Washington Evening Star of the 4th of July, 1912, concerning the papaya (papaia) as a "New Breakfast Fruit." I hope this will interest you.

Being from Hawaii, I am naturally interested about this papaya matter, but nothing in the account mentions anything about the fruits grown in Hawaii. I learned from a person lately that the papaya here is no longer than a banana, and about the diameter of a pear (alligator pear), and it is full of seeds. He was surprised when I told him that our papaya was about seven inches in diameter, and about nine or ten inches long.

Something ought to be done to enlighten the Agricultural Department officials about the Hawaiian papaya. I am afraid, however, that the Hawaiian fruit won't stand the distance well, but I believe that there is a good market for them here.

Thanking you for your kind attention, I remain,
Very respectfully yours,
R. GOO ON.

Have you ever eaten a papaya? The chances are that unless you are a tropical globe trotter you have not. They are not on the market here, but they are coming as a breakfast fruit just as surely as the grapefruit came. The Department of Agriculture has been experimenting with them for several years, and David Fairchild, chief of the division of foreign plant introduction, has just received a shipment from Jamaica that has won friends in the department. Papayas are being grown to some extent in Florida and Southern California, but the trouble is that up to date there has been no way to insure their being the good sort, and some of them are very good and some the reverse.

Fruit is Dark Green.

The fruit is a dark green and pear-shaped, and running from the size of a big orange to a medium-sized watermelon. It cuts like a cantaloupe, and has seeds in the interior cavity like a cantaloupe. There the resemblance ceases. When it is just ripe enough it is of almost a custard consistency, and the flavor is distinctive, but more like an apricot than anything else. A fair-sized one will divide up like a cantaloupe for table purposes.

They run the widest range of taste, the best varieties being exceedingly good. The trouble is that many of the fruits are "cross-fertilized" by the wild trees growing around them and there has never been any telling whether a seedling would come true to type.

Has Rapid Growth.

The fruit is a tropic one and grows rapidly. Some of the seedlings planted in February bear fruit in November. The fruiting season is long, running about six months. Experiments in shipping the fruit from Jamaica show that papayas keep for fifteen days. When shipped from Florida this would give an abundant time for marketing.

The department now is in correspondence with a grower in Jamaica who claims he has been able to grow the fruit from cuttings. If this is the case it of course solves the problem of propagating the good varieties. Experiments are to be tried in the greenhouses here with cuttings, and if they are successful the papaya will soon be put on the market from groves in Southern Florida and Southern California.

SOUGHT VOTER IN HIS LAIR

Six hundred and thirty-five names of voters in the city and county of Honolulu were added to the Great Register through the whirlwind campaign just completed by Clerk Kalauekiani, who is back in town after a ten day's tour of the island precincts.

"There are at least four hundred names placed on the registration lists, that would never be there, had we not gone out in the highways and byways for them," declared David Kalauekiani in speaking of his trip.

"There is a prevailing spirit of indifference among a large percentage of the country voters, anent the placing of their names on the great register.

The tour of the island taking up ten days time was in every way a success. By a personal invitation, and the distribution of notices many who failed to connect with the official on his tour have signified their intention of visiting the registration office within the next few days.

Perk—Say, Maria, you didn't tell anybody that secret I told you last night, did you?
Maria—Why, no! You see, I didn't know it was a secret.
